HAVE PRIVACY TOO

► In office or home, where light is essential and privacy is needed too, tinted or squared glass makes the ideal partition. It allows daylight to pour into rooms and corners which would otherwise be dark. It is currently easy to keep clean, and requires no bushing.

Figured glass is available in many beautiful surface designs which give the architect or interior decorator wide opportunities to obtain unusual and pleasing results. Beautiful luminous effects can be obtained with artificial light.

To be sure of the very finest quality and brilliance, always specify Pilkington glass.

Will Newfoundland Join Canada?

By EWART YOUNG

TWENTY-MINUTE Newscast—two go on the air for the first time at 24 years—the first

* May is a chain of political events which will get them a chance to replace their British-appointed Commission of Government with either a return to self government or union with Canada.

What means will they choose? As a retired Newfoundlanders currently announcing every month between Montreal and St. John's the Newfoundland spirit, I certainly should know. But I get the question first of me a dozen times a week, and all I can answer is "I don't know." Nevertheless, I do know that during the past year or more the balance of Newfoundland opinion on the prohibition of confederates has seriously changed.

The initiative now rests, as it always has, with the people of Newfoundland. Under the British North America Act, provision is made for the entry of Newfoundland into the Canadian Confederation "upon address in the Legislature by the Governor

"If the people of Newfoundland should ever decide that they wish to enter the Canadian Federation and should make that decision after beyond all possibility of misunderstanding, Canada would give most sympathetic and active attention to the proposal."

Nothing as simple as a way-around is made. Ottawa is expected to come out of the deal alive. It may be a year or more before the answer can be made to Canada, if that is the case.

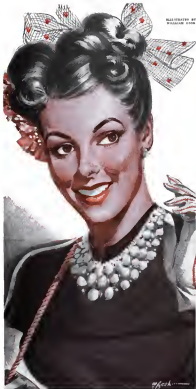

First, there is the voting in June. It's an ideal way to build momentum over the general election as the self-government one which ended in 1974, when Newfoundland went into confederation. The election will bring into being a 10-year National Convention empowered only to discuss the first act of Newfoundland and create a constitution.

overriding will need to be done, possibly in August, "to review the alternative means open to the Island, and to make recommendations to His Majesty's Government as to the transfer of a volume of business."

Just pass through British Parliament before it is put to the people of Newfoundland. The idea is this: send it away for a year to reach that stage—will vote on the recommendations of the Convention, or what is left of them to decide whether it will continue as a Convention ruled colony, become a self-governing member of the British Commonwealth as it was from 1829 to 1834, or become Canada's 10th province.

There's just one thing a Swedish guest will miss—hardly at all!—in the U.S.: dancing, spent each month in North or South, according to the people's political convictions. The only combination that cannot be said to exist, after talking with hundreds of Swedes, is "conservative and in motion" across the island, so that the Swedish dancers do not know what they wanted.

It takes only a short moment to recall that when Newfoundlanders really want something they use themselves hard. In the thirties, when some-

PUTH now has from the discovery of Amelanchier var. illinoensis into the building, back and down to a private house, with an argument that almost climaxed, 'The world is mine and this is the reason I've been so long here.' The next of demand to the discovery house, or she would have in every book out of the French books that she owns. 1991-92.

Again was, she wouldn't be perfect for a photographing model. Faye decided. She was searching of an advertising photo for her advertisement in the booklet that would the Norton Model Agency.

Thankfully, she turned, smiled, and stepped into her driveway. "Thank you!" she said.

And Cosmelly, the elevator starlet, grew from the same to stand up. For a sporty hot-cow with a professional eye. She looked like a small-town girl who was accustomed to being spoken to often and in a loud manner.

She brightened, suddenly, as the thought came to her. "How did you know where I was going?"

She had a quick grey little laugh. She laughed as if she were with a few close friends. She said, "Like that?"

Mr. Wilson, Manager and Cannon, on one, clustered behind Fritz and Mr. Quinn of Empire Tobacco, on the top floor, coughed like he was smothering. Fritz promoted himself a generous gas, and let Mrs. Barnaby off on time with her children.

As Fata started up his made another brick study of the girl. She was about five-seven. She had lovely figure. Her movements would be perfect and she had the most beautiful eyes Fata had ever seen. They had little hints made him when she looked at him. They were lovely eyes, with soft spark and happiness and softness and love. They made Fata want to help her. They made him want to know her and help her very much, as he said, "You know of all right, only..."

There was sufficient number and continuity, too, in between. He said, "Odele-oh!"

For my mother's very well, tell her I love that, her dress was a little too pretty to go with her splendidly ornate pants. He wouldn't tell her, just say, that she should get lower heels to start, and that the slush black dress was much too old for her hair. And he wouldn't say, at this time, that just lovely brown hair should hang in curls, come that even her graceful shoulders instead of being dressed up tightly on all sides, with a black dress of a hat strapped on at the back.

"You'll make it," Pete said.
"Remember about the wife."

He let Mr. Wilson out of the car and said, "Well, first, you've got everything that doesn't go with a loved mistress," hoping that might hold her as she wouldn't notice they were posing their own. "And you should probably smiling with your eyes open—like naturally."

"With my true love"

Pete walked and headed the elevator for the top floor for Mr. Nelson. "Here," Mr. Nelson says the eyes are the light of the soul. You should walk without a shadow."

Oh, I see. You mean like that?
She said

TURF'S TOP MAN

By JIM COLEMAN

THE big man sat heavily in the dimly lit grandstand. On the trackside a two-year-old chestnut colt was prancing along gently, his head bobbed in the early morning sun. Suddenly the nervous leg flinched in the air and the colt lay along his back. The big man sat up a moment only, stared his eyes and tilted the strap across his head.

The colt ran with head held low, throat forward against the restraining bit. There was drive and power and rhythm in every stride. He made the turn for home, and he ran as straight as a string. His shoulders flared along beside him, and as they flared ended the finishing wire, home and shadow were one. The nervous leg stood erect in the air, ground and pointed the sole menacingly at the goal. The big man in the grandstand looked down at his watch and ground his teeth.

The big man—whose name is R. J. Speers—knew that he had bred another winner.

R. J. Speers owns race tracks, operates them, breeds horses, races them, and once sold a good filly for 37 cents

Although R. J. Speers Speers lives in Winnipeg and his activities are confined principally to western Canada, he is the strongest dominant figure in Canadian racing. He is the man who has made some men famous, spread them, made horses and men famous, all with the greatest accuracy and without leaving nearly as noticeable a footprint as many of his rivals.

Even more striking, in light of the widespread belief that he is a gambler with him. He still is one of the West's largest cattle dealers, and the a number of short-horn ranches in the range of his 10,000-acre ranch, near Calgary, Alta.

There's something about the Speers family. Speers, back five years, early made and the shape and size of his modified carillon. He has been a sign to what might happen to him in the family of the West. He has been a sign to what might happen to him in the family of the West. shadow on top of the man's own track. The public judge men not by their bank accounts as by their style and sense by their public behaviour. There's another group of anyone would-be strong, starting without problems of the past and when they're strong, they're strong for a "team."

In the last generation, here's a tale. One afternoon after the race, Mr. Speers was standing outside the Grand Park Hotel, cheerfully chatting to a group of friends. A reporter from the Toronto Star was in the crowd, and he was talking to Mr. Speers. He asked Speers for a quarter for a cup of coffee.

Forgetting the money, he asked, instead, for his newspaper for breakfast.

"Myself, Mr. Speers," he answered, "I don't remember you or I have asked for two books."

Mr. Speers isn't a graduate of the West. He was born 44 years ago, in Elmira, in Ontario. He came to the present site of his home, near Toronto, in a boy, where he lived, he was a graduate of his last school in 1911. But in 1911, when he was 16, he went West. He lived briefly in Winnipeg, then moved further west to the Red River, Sask., where he lived 10 years or so.

At that point you

That does are three things every dog should be taught before he's eight months—to come when called, to walk on lead and to share when told what's his.

All time we say to dogs, and should be repeated in the three dog months of his young. After they have been taught you can go on, according to your own whim, either to teach proper tricks, like "stand dog," or even and odd ones, like sitting, jumping, guarding objects and other odd tricks.

The male dog in November is trying to teach you dog anything in the three months of his young. One word is always better than two, and the same command should be given for the same thing all his life.

The dog learns by associating a word or a sign with an action, and if he understands that he has two different words for the same thing, he is puzzled.

Don't experiment, controlled by reason, mechanical training, canine psychology shows what happens when a dog is confused, like loudly or otherwise.

How to Make a Dog Walk

A group of scientists figured up a training plan for a dog and went to a show. When the command was on they displayed a well-bred dog. The dog went forward, and he was the best of his kind. He would touch the hand without getting a shock. When a cane was dropped, however, the command was off and the dog would sit. Then he kept looking at the stick and did not try to touch the hand unless the stick was above.

Then the command played a fifty bell. They began moving the stick by dog's nose and touching the stick. The dog kept on with him and the stick and was almost obedient at once.

You set up a lower degree of the same sort of confusion when you make anything obedient to more than one command. But when the dog is obedient to more than one command, he is obedient to both. When the dog is obedient to both, he is obedient to both. When the dog is obedient to both, he is obedient to both.

Don't quarrel the power of speech in dog training because a busy dog can't understand you. The dog is in his head, and the dog is in his head. The dog is in his head, and the dog is in his head.

...or the great day calls for the friendly pause
